BOOK SYNOPSIS

Dutch and Gina are back. Dutch is now in his second term as president, and Gina is his brand new First Lady. And only one month after the inauguration, their honeymoon is over. Dutch has to deal with crisis after crisis that often questions his ability to lead, while Gina has to deal with a doubtful press that refuses to accept her as First Lady. She is criticized about everything, from her dress style to her beliefs in social justice to her devotion to her husband. She often finds herself in confrontations she never asked for, but also never backs down from. It is Dutch, however, who refuses to allow anyone to disrespect her. But when women from Dutch's past make accusations that rock his presidency to its core, creating a maelstrom of unrelenting, nasty attacks the interracial couple had never dreamed they'd encounter, they find themselves caught in a whirlwind that pushes their relationship near the breaking point. And that forces them to question if their love and devotion are enough.
